

ABSTRACT OF THE DISCLOSURE

Method and systems are provided for in vivo, non-invasive detection of blood analytes.

A portion of the sterile matrix located beneath a nail is illuminated by passing radiation from an optical source through the nail into the sterile matrix. Scattered, refracted, or reflected radiation

5 emitted within the sampled volume is collected and analyzed to identify and quantify one or more selected analytes.